The Call for Troops.

There were eight calls for troops during the war, viz: April 15, 1861, GREATEST NEWSPAPER for 75,000 militia for three months; in the West. The rival of any in Amer May 3, 1861, for forty regiments of volunteers for three years, and for eight regiments of regulars and 18,000 seamen; July 2, 1862, for 300,000 men for three years, or the war; call of February 1, 1864, for 500,000 men for three years, or the war; call of March 14, 1864, for 200,000 additional men; call of July 18, 1864, for 500,000 men for one, two, or three years. In addition to this acts were passed in July, 1861, authorizing the President to accept the services of volunteers in such numbers not exceeding 1,000,000, as he might deem necessary, period of service not to be over three years nor less than six months. No formal call, however, was issued. It is not to be understood that the several calls were completely filled, hence the various drafts under special acts of Congress.

MACVEAGH'S REASONS.

Why lie Insists on Leaving the Cabinet —He Has No Confidence in Arthur.

[By Associated Press to Plain Dealer.] Washington, October 25 .- In explanation of the statement that the President again, yesterday, solicited Mr. MacVeagh to remain in his Cabinet permanently, it is said that the offer was made to disarm criticism in case of failure of the Star route prosecutions, by showing that MacVeagh refused to remain in the Cabinet to prosecute them, in spite of the urged requests made up to the very last moment. The President's nearest friends assert, however, that he has conceived a warm admiration for the outgoing Attorney General, whose frank assertion of the right of the President to choose his own advisers relieved him of embarrassment in regard to retaining Garfield's Cabinet. This frankness was not relished so well by the other members of the late Administration, and it is no secret that there is very little love lost between the late Attorney General and his fellow secre-

Mc. MacVeagh, in alluding to the assertion that he was deserting the star route cases because he found to be weak and likely to fail, said that the cases might fail, but it would not be from lack of great rascality. There would be evidence enough to send a dozen men to the penitentiary, but it would nevertheless require the whole moral weight of the administration to be thrown in favor of conviction if it was expected to overcome the influences brought to bear by the accused to secure acquittal. If merely left to take their course, if the administration failed to take any interest and stood neutral, the chances were in favor of a failure of justice. The accused have plenty of money and able council, social and political backing, and with two exceptions the entire newspaper press of the district actively creating sympathy for them. That juries in the district are susceptible to suspicion of leniency towards parties accused of frauds on the government, the slowness of the present grand jury to act in the Howgate indictment is a case in point. A true bill was found only after eight days of investigation, when the evidence of Lieutenant Coziare, given on the first day, backed as it was by records and vouchers, ought to have been sufficient of itself. The grand jury insisted on hearing evidence, as if Howgate was on trial before them. Should the same course be pursued in the star route cases, and they will come before the same men, it will take three months to get a true bill from them. Mr. MacVeagh said that he had talked the whole question with great frankness with the President, and left him possessed with the fullest knowledge of the present condition of the case. His personal relations with the President have from the beginning of their intercourse in July last been of the most cordial character, and he entertained a strong hope that the administration would fulfill the highest expectations
